TALKING IN THEIR SLEEP.

You think I am dead,"

"You think I am dead,"
The apple tree said,
"Because I have never a leaf to show,
Because I stoop
And my branches droop
And the dull, gray mosses over me grow,
But I'm alive in trunk and shoot.
The buds of next May
I fold away,
But I pity the withered grass at my root."

"You think I am dead,"

The quick grass said, ase I have parted with stem and blade, But under the ground I am safe and sound, With the snow's thick blanket over me laid.

I'm all alive and ready to shoot

Should the spring of the year
Come dancing here,
But I pity the flower without branch or root."

A soft voice said.

Because not a branch or root I own.
I nover have died.
Entrose I hide
In a plumy seed that the wind has sown.
Patient I wait through the long winter hours.
You will see me again.
I shall laugh at you then
Out of the eyes of a hundred flowers."
—Edith M. Thomas in Boston Journal.

"You think I am dead,"

"MRS. RESCUE."

We were between the Azores and Madeira, bound for a port in the West Indies, in the American ship Ben Joyce, when a curious thing happened one morning about an hour before daylight. The wind had died away soon after mid-night, and by 2 o'clock the sea was like a mill pond. The ship was swinging her head to every point of the compass, and with the exception of the lookout man the watch on deck were catching 40 winks of sleep. I was that lookout man. It is required on all vessels at sea that the man on the bows shall be as wide awake in a calm as when the craft is moving, and I was digging my eyes and fighting away sleep when a curious sound from over the bows caught my ear. It was a dark night, with not a star visible, and I could not see beyond the end of the jib boom. As I listened to the noises the only thing I could compare it to was the noses of sharks bumping against a small boat. It would ous noises and left the cause to his own perception. "There's a raft or boat out there," he said after a moment, "and the noise may be made by oars. I'll burn a port have been ridiculous to call to the mate and give him any such explanation, but

I finally called his attention to the curi-

The port fire lighted up the sea for 100 feet around, and the first thing we saw was a ship's boat within 40 feet of us on the port bow. In the bottom of the boat were two human figures and one of them a woman, and all around the boat the sea was alive with sharks. They were diving under the boat, running their noses against it and seeking to up-set it, and had it been a shore boat they would doubtless have had it over. As soon as we caught sight of the boat the mate ran to call the captain. By the time the captain had arrived the boat had drifted right down against us, and one of the crew lowered himself into her and made fast the painter. Then I got down to assist him, and we passed up the bodies, the man first. We might just as well have dropped him into the sea, for he had been dead for 24 hours at least. As we picked up the woman, having not a doubt that she was also dead, she moved and uttered a groan and gave us a great fright. We had her on board after a couple of minutes, and the small boat, which was a captain's chandlery business in Brooklyn. One gig, new and without a name, was later evening, two years after the wedding, Captain Clark was a single man 30 years old, and neither of his mates was a married man. They found the woman greatly exhausted through thirst and hunger, but with life enough to build hopes on, and they handled her so well that at the end of an hour it was reported on deck that she was asleep and would probably pull through. An hour after daybreak a breeze came, and we got on our course, and after a careful inspection of the body of the strange man it was given a sailor's burial. His pockets turned out nothing but some tobacco and a few bits of silver, but he was recognized by all as a sailor. He had the dress and general look, and the initials "S. E. W." had been pricked on his left arm in india ink. The boat was provided with mast, sail and oars; but, as I said, she was new, freshly painted and had no name on her. We didn't do much wondering over it, as we knew the woman would explain all when she regained her strength, but all were glad that it had fallen to our lot to pick up the boat. It may surprise you to learn how long that woman slept. At intervals the captain raised her head to administer soup or drink, but not to actually interrupt her sleep, and she did not open her eyes until 30 hours had passed. Then sleep had brought her fully back to life. It was 24 hours later before we heard her story or, to our unbounded amazement, learned that there was no story to tell. The woman could remember nothing of the past, not even her name. If you have ever read Clark Russell, you will remember two such incidents in his books. You may have set them down as "sailors' yarns," but such things have happened on land a dozen times over. Every day for the last five years I have occupied a desk with a man who was practically drowned while bathing. After two hours' hard work they brought back the spark of life, but it was weeks before he left his bed. He began a new life at that point. All the previous 20 years were blotted out as if they had never been.

The woman awoke to find herself aboard a strange ship with strange men around her. She was a handsome, well formed woman, English in looks and speech and about 30 years of age. Her apparel was fine and costly, but she wore no jewelry and had neither a purse nor a cardease. When asked how she tame to be at sea in the gig, what was her name, whether she had visited Madeira or the Azores, if she lived in England, she could tell nothing, absolutely nothing. She began a new life as she opened her eyes in the cabin of the Joyce. These things all came to us on deck, because the case was a mystery and because the more it was talked over the sooner a solution might be found. After three or four days both cabin and fo'castle came to the same general con-clusion, which was this: The sailor must have been rowing the woman off to a ship or from a ship to shore at some of the islands. The gig had just been bought by a merchantman, and her name had not yet been painted on. The boat had been driven ahead of a gale for three or four days, and she had not a biscuit or a drop of water aboard. She must have sighted a score of ships in that great highway, but yet was not picked up. One would have thought the sailor would have borne up better than the woman, but he may not have been in good health.

That's the way we figured it out, and it looked reasonable enough, and of course the right thing to do was to leave the woman at Trinidad and report the case as widely as possible. Queerly enough, she fought and baffled this plan. Our captain was a good looking man, and, feeling that she owed him her life and doub ss being rather ro-mantic by nature, what did she do but fall in love with him! That is only half the story. He fell head over heels in love with her. The position was most embarrassing for him, however. All of us were agreed that the woman was or had been a wife, though she had no finger ring to prove it. The chances were that she had a husband somewhere. And wouldn't the man search the whole world over to find and regain her? Captain Clark would not dare marry her under the circumstances. It was crimi-nal even to love her. I think he saw things as an honorable man should, and yet he could not help loving her. When we reached Trinidad, he notified the English consul, placed the woman in the household of a friend and then sailed for the port of New York.

The stor / of our picking up the living and the dead was published far and wide. First and last it must have appeared in 500 newspapers, and sailors talked of it in a thousand ships. Three months passed before we returned to Trinidad, but no one had identified the woman. She had to have a name, and they had given her that of Mrs. Rescue. She was well and happy and glad to see her lover, and talk and argue as he would be could not convince her that any other man might have a claim on her. She simply repudiated the past. We got a charter for France, went to London in ballast and thence got a freight to Demerara. While the ship was discharging cargo Captain Clark went up to Trinidad. There was no news and no change. The publication of that story all over the world had not solved the mystery. No husband had come forward; no relatives had written. As our ship had been chartered to run between New York and Liverpool, Captain Clark decided to take Mrs. Rescue home with him, and this was done, and she was placed in the family of his sister on Long Island. I never saw her after the trip across, but I can tell you what followed.

When almost three years had elapsed and there was still no news, the two were married. The woman had not recovered one single point of memory. She was a stranger to herself. She had no country, no relatives, no name except by chance. After marriage the captain left the sea and went into the ship the captain of an English tramp steamer just in called to ask for some information. He complained of not being well, and, one thing leading to another, he finally related a tale of woe. Several years before, while his ship was at the Azores, his wife, who had been sent ashore in the morning, attempted to return about nightfall and just as a squall was coming up. The boat was upset and the occupants lost. They found neither the boat nor the bodies, but there wasn't the least doubt of the calamity. The loss of the wife so affected the husband that he was ill of brain fever for months, and he had never read a line of her rescue in midocean. There was the husband at last, and Captain Clark realized that he had rights before him. He had married the woman on chance, and chance had gone against him. They were alone in the office, and perhaps he thought of killing the man who had come to break up his happy home. It was only a step to the edge of the slip, and perhaps he thought of suicide as the best way out. The climax was a curious one, but in keeping. The strange captain, who had given his name as Burke, was looking at Captain Clark in a puzzled way and wondering why he should be so affected by the story when a yacht anchor swinging from a beam above his head parted its fastenings and fell upon him and crushed him to the floor, and though he did not die for two
